BLOCK ISLAND, R. I., February

of the Larchmont disaster was Mrs.
Harris Feldman, of New York City, who was rescued with her husband from the after portion of the deckhouse, which had been torn from the

Some, weakened by the cold and exposure, lost their grip on the support, and were washed away by the waves and drowned. Others died and rolled overboard. Still Mrs. Feldman, aided by her husband, clung to the raft. Feldman at one time was a sallor of the Black Sea, and he knew the necessity of keeping up some physical action to make the blood circulate in such biting weather. By word and such biting weather. By word and example, he induced his wife to keep arms and legs moving, although the woman became so greatly exhausted that she could scarcely make muscles respond to her will. chilled limbs were rubbed by Feidman into activity when they were benumbed, and by his efforts she survived, although apparently more near ly dead than alive when the Elsie ap-

Another Version.

Louis McFarland, a negro waiter on the Larchmont, gave a version of the reparture of the captain's boat which was entirely different from that given by Hiergesell. He said that when he reached the captain's boat, to which he was assigned, he found Captain McVey there. The captain ordered that the boat be swing out board, ready to lower, calling to the passengers at the same time to step into the boat. The passengers, McFarland said, seemed afraid to do so, and as the steamer was going down fact, Captain McVey ordered that the boat be lowered. When it reached the water, however, a rope fastened to the ring-boit and attached to the davit above became caught, and those in the boat were indanger of being dragged down with the steamer, when Boatswain Andrew Tobesen, who was on the deck saved their lives by cutting the rope.

Hergesell's statement was not confirmed by any other survivors of the terrible tragedy.

and suffering seemed to have shifted.

The Kentucky's smoke was still visible across the sound, however, when a little fishing schooner came intrying in before the wind with her fing at half mast. A moment later a second fisherman was seen heading in shore, also flying the signal or death from her masthead. A third schooner, and then a fourth sailed in, each with a half-masted flag.

After the fishemen were within halling distance, the captains shouted their news assiste.

bodies, two of them the bodies of women.

The bodies were, with one exception, fully clothed, and in addition, had life preservers strapped to them. This fact leads to the belief that the victims, unlike the others, who drifted ashore, had remained on board the ill-fated steamer long enough to fasten the lifebolis about them. All of the bodies were eneased in ice and were kept on the surface only by the life-preservers.

Peservers. Nearly all those who escaped death are in a critical condition. When the steamer Kentucky arrived, all were wrapped in blankets and those who could not walk, were carried by the life-savers to the life-boats on the beach. They were then rowed to the beach. They were then rowed to the steamer, where the officers had made every possible preparation for their comfort. The dead followed the living, and when the last body had been piaced on board, the Kentucky, with her flag at halfmast, steamed out of the harbor on her way to Provi

DYING SALVATIONISTS. KNEELING, SING HYMNS

NEW YORK, February 13.—One of the thrilling scenes of the disaster was that enacted by the band of forty Salvation Army men and women who went to their death with smiles upon their faces and hymns of praise upon their tongues. When the two boats collided men fought with women for their lives. Husbands for the moment forgot their wives. The ruling spirit was self-preservation. When the madness was at its height there arose above the song of the wind and the song of death a hymn, of hopelic came from the little band of Salvationists.

Slowly and distinctly arose the song, gaining in strength as the moments fled:

"Jesus, lover of my soul, Let me to thy bosom fly, While the angry waters roll, While the tempest still is high."

In the fitful half light of the night the struggling passengers, stopping, saw the slingers huddled together kneeling upon the deck. Invoking the Almighty to hea their prayer, while others fought savagely for the hoats, the little band seemingly Invoking the Almighty to hea their prayer, while others fought savagely for the boats, the little band, seemingly for the boats, the little band, seemingly for the boats, the little band, seemingly for the boats, that their lives were at stake, that they had a chance to save themselves if they would fight as did the others, knelt and prayed.

The spell cast over the ship-wrecked passengers, however, was but momentary. In a moment or two they worn again fighting for their lives like demons. Slowly the steamer settled. The minutes passed and the Salvationists still prayed and sang. The water was soon at their feet. At the touch of its icy fingers they felt the hand of death laid upon them. A few minutes and the water was to their knees. There was a wavering of the song of praise, but it was not stilled.

Gradually one by one the members succumbed. As one after another fell exhausted, there still arose prayer upon prayer, until there were left but half a dozen of the band. Men called to them that there was still a chance to live.

New York; T. P. Cook, Chicago; Franianyanes, San Francisco, and J. Levin, At anta. The letter reads as follows:

"This company has received petitions within the last sixty days from sixteen offices in the West and Southwest, asking for an increase of temper cent, in the salaries of employes. These petitions have been given careful consideration, bearing in mind that the company could not discriminate in favor of a few offices, but that any action taken should be general. In this connection it has been necessary to consider the enormously-increased cost of all kinds of telegraph material, which, in many cases, has been from fifty to one hundred per cent, while the tariff rates on messages and other traffic are very low in view of the demands of the public for ever-increasing facilities and more rapid service. In fact many of these rates are relies of former ruinous competition and are unprofitable. Notwithstanding these facts the company has decided to increase the salaries of operators at its principal noie. Operators of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Companies in this city were greatly clated by the information received yesterday that an increase of ten per cent in the salaries of employes in the cities generally had been ordered by General Manager R. C. Clowry, and that practically a similar order had been promulgated by the Postal Telegraph Company.

The order announced the increase in the salaries of the Western Union operators in this city came from General Superintendent J. Levin, of Atlanta, who has charge of the Southern territory. It simply announced that petitions for increase having been received from several large cities it was deemed fair to make it general in the cities. Seventy-Five Telegraphers.
